

Interviewer: Thanks for making time. We're building an app that plans a week of dinners and orders the groceries for you. How do you handle dinner planning today?

Priya: Every Sunday I spent two hours building a spreadsheet of meals and a shopping list.

Priya: Last month I paid 60 dollars for a meal kit subscription just to stop doing that, and I cancelled it because the portions were wrong for four people.

Interviewer: What happens when the plan breaks?

Priya: Last week we ordered takeout three times, and that cost us over 100 dollars.

Priya: I already tried two planning apps and I still use the spreadsheet because neither one ordered the groceries.

Interviewer: What would you want from a tool like ours?

Priya: It has to order from the store I already use.

Interviewer: We have an early version. Would you be open to trying it?

Priya: Yes. I will pay for the first month right now if you can set it up this week.

Priya: Can you sign me up today? I can introduce you to two other parents at school who have the same problem.

Interviewer: That would be great.

Priya: I'll send you their emails tonight, and I booked Thursday at 6 for the setup call.
